Title: Qvisten Animation Rules The Waves With Qube and Microsoft Azure

URL: <https://www.pipelinefx.com/portfolio-view/qvisten-animation-rules-the-waves-with-qube-and-microsoft-azure/>

When submitting a job, an artist doesn't have to think about where it goes. If space is available in Qvisten's render farm, Qube! automatically routes it there; if not, it goes to the cloud. "You just launch Maya through the script, then press Submit as normal and Qube! does the rest," says Rydberg.

Since some scenes on Anchors Up contain over 100GB of textures, Qvisten also created a disk image containing shared resources for the movie. Rather than having to re-upload the files with every job, the image was simply replicated on every cloud node before rendering began, saving time and bandwidth.

Title: Learn About GPU Rendering

URL: <https://www.pipelinefx.com/gpurendering/>

If you are researching the ability to use GPU's for rendering on Windows, there is an important point to take note of. NVIDIA has two different GPU drivers for Windows, which can have an effect on how your Qube worker runs jobs. NVIDIA offers the Tesla Compute Cluster (TCC) driver and the WDDM driver. The TCC drivers will only work with the professional series cards like the Quadro and Tesla products and are not available for the GeForce GPU gaming series cards. This means you will not be able to use your machines with GeForce cards as part of your available GPU render farm.

NVIDIA drivers for Linux do not have this differentiation. The TCC driver allows for GPU rendering to be performed by a system-level service without a user logged into the host but prohibits connecting a video display to the GPU. On the other hand, the WDDM drivers, typically used when a GPU is installed in an artist's workstation, require that a user be logged into a host to run a GPU render. Your desktops must have a professional grade card and use the TCC driver to render as a system-level service.

Title: Rendering in the Cloud with Qube!

URL: <https://www.pipelinefx.com/cloud-testing-faq/>

Which Cloud Provider?

You can use any kind of cloud provider such as a private cloud environment like Scalr or Liquid Web or a public cloud provider. Almost all of our clients use public cloud providers - Google, Microsoft, or Amazon. We have clients using Qube! in production on all three, and we have successfully completed our own test renders on all three. We have partnership agreements with Google and Microsoft, so not only would we recommend you using one of those, we can also work together with Google or Microsoft to get you started.

Once you have an account set up with your chosen cloud provider and the secure connection is in place, that's when Qube! takes over and can manage jobs seamlessly between your on premise farm and your cloud farm.

How Does PipelineFX Help?

- Our experience - not only do we run all of our development and full testing environment in the cloud, but we have a multitude of experience from helping clients solve their cloud challenges.
- Our partnerships - as mentioned above, we have partnership agreements with both Microsoft and Google. We work quite closely with both providers having completed co-marketing campaigns and a bit of co-development with each. We can get you in contact with Media and Entertainment specialists at each company, can help you get cloud credits for the set up and testing of your cloud farm, and we have even come together with the providers to provide solutions for studios in a severe resource crunch.
- Qube! credit - either through trial licensing or through our Metered Licensing, we can give you credits for Qube! licenses while you are setting up and testing your cloud environment. Distribution of these credits is done on a case by case basis, of course, after we have a conversation about your goals.
- Qube! licensing flexibility - we can help you determine what the best Qube! licensing option will be for your rendering needs. You can use your existing paid Qube! licenses (subscription or perpetual) for your cloud nodes, you can enable Metered Licensing and overflow from your facility to the cloud, or you might be able to rent Qube! licenses from the cloud provider, depending on which provider it is.
